Your householder collection services – an overview

Thank you for recycling your household waste. We're delighted to let you know that Falkirk Council currently recycles 55.9%, and with your continued help we'll increase that figure.

As a nation and within our Council area there's more we can and need to do to meet Scotland's ambitious targets of recycling 70% waste by 2025. Additionally biodegradable materials such as food waste, paper and card cannot be sent to landfill from 2021.

This guide highlights how you should use all of the bins provided. Our new service is in line with the Council's commitment to the Scottish Household Recycling Charter, which is designed to introduce a consistent approach to recycling across Scotland.

Why is your service changing?

Thanks to support by the Scottish Government, we are providing you with a burgundy bin which allows us to separately collect paper and card. Plastics, cans and cartons will continue to be collected in your blue bin. By making this change the quality of collected materials improves and the value increases - providing financial benefit to the Council and enabling easier recycling or reuse of materials.

Put simply, collecting materials together costs the Council money, whilst separating materials can provide the Council with an income. All of which means available Council funds will go further.

What happens to materials collected for recycling?

All of your collected burgundy bin and blue bin material will be taken to Roughmote, where it is separated and processed before being sent for reprocessing.

We process materials to ensure that the quality is as high as can be. The materials we collect are run through a picking line to remove any items that shouldn't be there.

The more separating you do at home, by using your bins correctly - as outlined in this guide, the more you can help us with this process.
